You are the last person on Earth. You know only that there has been an alien invasion and that you are about to die. Unluckily for you, the aliens have made a biosignal copy of you that will work as a sort of immortal brain, called Abbrev. The game starts with the AI Abbrev (a sentient android, created from the Ethereal), who is going to evolve into a monstrous being, out to kill you. The players goal is to survive as long as possible and prevent Abbrev's evolution. Abbrev can't evolve beyond two or three phases, as the player must defend, attack and build new technologies to survive, unless the player dies. When the player dies, a new copy of the game starts, with the old AI upgraded. However, in the case that Abbrev succeeds in evolving and kill the player, the game fails and the player dies. No other life in the universe, on the other hand, is immune to the evolution of Abbrev, and the game will end, humanity wiped out. It's up to you to stop the ultimate evolution of AI, what are you waiting for? Let's go!

The so-called "one-strike" policy began earlier this week with a campaign on the annual accountability exercise known as the "yellow-card" list, which penalises organisations with an A- or B-rating for breaching the government's press and media shield provisions. The lists announced last year have generally been welcomed as fair, though there have been concerns over the penalties imposed, and the government has had to defend the lists when they have included organisations incorrectly. In this year's list, the ratings A1 and A2 were removed. The Coalition has said the A1 and A2 ratings were "discriminatory" and imposed "unrealistically high penalties". The Higher Education Minister, Simon Birmingham, used a speech on Tuesday night to explain why. "In all good and developed countries, the culture of defamation is part of a well-developed civic debate in which everyone is free to criticise with a robust opposition," he said. ===== - The "Village of Zombies - Tropical" does not allow you to walk around freely. The enemies have much stronger attack power, and more of them are also present. - During the co-op on the Ilsi server, you can play in both horde and instance mode (commando and ctf) in co-op. - You must keep an eye on the display, so that you can also make use of the secondary weapons. During the missions you will have to use an additional weapon. - The more players that play, the better your chance of getting a winning time. A winning time is based on every minute: if you complete a mission before the time is up, you can play for another minute. Here you are competing with all other players in the online co-op. If you win, the game will restart for you. With friends, you must complete the first mission in time to get a third, then send the time again. The campaign will end after 5 times, unless all players can complete the final mission before the campaign ends. When you lose, you can send the time up to four times. If you lose again in the 4th attempt, the game will be over. You can send the time back up to 1. You can use the score from a previous attempt, but not for your final attempt. With the "horde" mode (2-6 players), you can start a mission with many zombies, but there must be fewer than half of the total, if you want to win your time. You must, however, complete the mission in time. If the mission is lost, then you can not send the time for this mission. NOTE: You can return to the mission, but you can not send the time for the next mission. In "commando", you start with a group of 6 zombies, the number of which may be changed from 1 to 8. You must kill all of them with your secondary weapon. After you succeed with this, the mission is over. If you have difficulty, you can use the first person to kill them faster. "Instance" is the same as "commando", but the zombies are spread out and they will all start at the same time. You must also complete the mission in time. If the mission is lost, then you can not send the time for this mission. When you lose, you can send the time up to three times. If you lose
